Quarterly Commentary

Over the fourth quarter of the year, developed markets continued to rally, providing global investors with their third calendar year of strong positive returns. The continuation of accommodative central bank policy, strong corporate earnings growth, and the best year on record for global mergers and acquisitions helped to propel global markets higher throughout most of the year. While market volatility remained low, the emergence of Omicron (a highly infectious variant) combined with a significant rise in global inflation to levels not seen in decades, gave rise to some concern in the latter part of the year. This pickup in inflationary pressures has pushed up the prices of essential goods (such as food), as well as the cost of transport and utilities: more than two-thirds of people around the world are now feeling the squeeze. The Bank of England reacted immediately by raising interest rates to 0.25%, while many other leading central banks reduced their monthly asset buying programmes.

The performance of fixed-income markets remained flat, as they tried to assimilate the effects of higher inflation and likely central bank intervention. Equally, commodities have been among the most volatile assets in 2021 with coffee and crude oil to lithium and gas delivering stellar performances. Other economic challenges came in the shape of global supply chain bottlenecks and labour shortages, as the "Great Resignation" hit the headlines around the world. Nevertheless, Wall Street continued to hit new all-time highs, completing a hat-trick of positive annual returns, its best three-year stretch since 1999, and setting a near 90% return over the past 36 months.

Looking towards 2022, portfolios will need to stay broadly diversified: Covid, inflation and changes to central bank policy are likely to affect market sentiment over the coming months. However, above-trend GDP growth and robust corporate earnings should justify maintaining an overweight asset allocation towards global equities.

Strategy Commentary

Performances have been mixed across funds over the past quarter. The global recovery from the effects of Covid-19 was again disrupted with the emergence of the Omicron variant, with concerns over persistent inflation and rate hikes continuing to unsettle global markets. The top three performing funds were iShares Core S&P 500 ETF (+10.46%), L&G ROBO Global Robotics & Automation ETF (+8.01%) and Man GLG Continental European Growth (+6.93). The Man GLG strategy enjoyed an improved outlook for European equities. This can partly be attributed to the strong performance in several of the luxury goods names – companies in which the manager of the fund holds significant investments. Historically, the luxury industry has been associated with concepts and notions such as excessive consumerism, extremely high costs, elitism or guilty pleasures. However, as new generations take over the market with their new values, consumer expectations in relation to luxury brands are changing accordingly. Companies in the Man GLG portfolio continue to innovate, with management teams focusing more on improving their digital capabilities to benefit from the rapidly changing, more online-focused market.

The worst performing fund over the quarter was Baillie Gifford Global Discovery (-11.82%). This strategy was affected by the underperformance of many of the earlier stage and innovative names that were so favoured by these managers in Q4. As investors continue to turn their attention away from lockdown winners to companies positioned to benefit from the reopening of the economy – especially in the face of encouraging data suggesting that Omicron is milder than previous variants – several of the fund's investments have seen their share price slide. We remain optimistic about the prospects for this fund, as its explicit focus on 'discovering' the innovators of the future makes the portfolio well-suited to a pick-up in global economic activity.
